When my mother died, I was a junior high school student. My mother was weak and sick, but because most of my friends (①) a bento (a Japanese lunch box) made by their mothers, she got up early and made a delicious one for me. (ア) It was a pleasure to eat it with my friends every day. When my mother died, my father and I were very sad and kept crying for a few days. I was *¹absent from school for a week. I said to my father, "I'll go to school tomorrow. I'll buy (②) for lunch, so please give me some money." My father said, "Don't worry. I'll make a bento for you every day." I was (③) at his words. He wasn't good at cooking. He worked for a company and was very busy every day.

The next day when I left home to go to school, he handed a bento to me. On my lunch break, I opened the bento. It didn't look very delicious, and really tasted very bad. I (④) it and threw it away. I went home and handed the empty bento to my father without saying anything. (イ) He was very glad. He thought I ate everything that he made. I said, "Dad, you are very busy, so you (⑤) make a bento for me." But my father got up early and continued to make one. I (⑥) that I didn't eat the bento and just threw it away.

But then one day my teacher noticed that I threw my bento away and didn't have lunch, so he called my father and talked about (ウ) it. I thought that my father felt very sad and angry with me. That day he said nothing when he came home from work. The next day my father said, "I'm very busy now and have to work in my room for two hours from today."

A few days later, when I opened a bento on my lunch break, my friend said, "It looks very delicious." I tried it. It tasted very delicious.

From that day I ate a bento that my father made for me every day. I wanted to *²apologize to my father. That night I went into my father's room. I thought he was working. A few days ago he said he (⑦) at home, but (エ) it was not true. He was reading books for cooking and (⑧) *³how to make a delicious bento. There were a lot of books for cooking in his room. He said to me, "Making your bento is very important work for me." I was very glad and couldn't stop crying. "Thank you, Dad. Your bento is as delicious as Mom's one." He said, "Her bento is more delicious than mine. I'd like to make a more delicious one."

Though he was very busy, he spent one hour making a bento and two hours reading books for cooking. He spent (⑨) hours for me every day. I decided to get up early every morning and help my father make a bento. "Next time I'll make a delicious bento for my father. I'd like my father to eat a bento that I'll make."
